

Dr Anthea Rhodes

Dr Anthea Rhodes is a paediatrician and medical educator. She has clinical interests in the health needs of the vulnerable child, and is an expert in child development and behaviour. Anthea undertook her paediatric training at The Royal Children's Hospital (RCH), Melbourne, where she has worked since 2004. She is a lecturer, and Child and Adolescent Health subject co-ordinator for the Doctor of Medicine at the University of Melbourne. Anthea has been involved in a number of research projects across the fields of health service delivery and health professional education. She has been the director of the RCH Child Health Poll since its first release in December 2015.