

Professor Lydia Plowman

Professor Lydia Plowman is a Fellow of the UK's Academy of Social Sciences and Dean of Research in the College of Arts, Humanities and Social Sciences at the University of Edinburgh, Scotland. She has been conducting research that focuses on children and digital media for more than twenty years and is particularly interested in digital play and the ways in which technology is integrated into family life and the home. Lydia enjoys exploring ways for young children to be active participants in research, as well as involving family members and educators in such a way that we can gain insights into their practices, values and attitudes.
